

LOL. [REDACTED] Cool! I remember you telling me about that connection but forgot you were there. I'm insanely jealous. Must be freezing your okole off. My regards to the vodka!

I'll keep you posted via email...

From: Chassy, Bruce [mailto:bchassy@uiuc.edu]
Sent: Wednesday, November 24, 2010 5:18 AM
To: Val Giddings
Subject: Re: possible soybean project...

around, yeah, I'm around

I am in Vladivostok.

Back Saturday and then around until Dec. 12. Then out to Idaho (and Schweitzer) for 5 weeks.

Bruce

On Nov 23, 2010, at 6:54 PM, Val Giddings wrote:

I had a number of similar thoughts, but I think the soy bean guys might be willing to pony up a chunk to underwrite a rebuttal. I've left Eric an email asking him to call me so we can discuss as I had the same thoughts re content as you did. If we do this right we can leverage the AcaRev Brand here a bit. Let me do a bit more sniffing.

Are you around for a while? I'm not traveling again until late December...

V

From: Chassy, Bruce [mailto:bchassy@uiuc.edu]
Sent: Tuesday, November 23, 2010 6:49 PM
To: Val Giddings
Subject: Re: possible soybean project...

Val

I had a few minutes so I read the whole document. There's really nothing new there.

I'll bet our friends at Monsanto would be wiling to write the rebuttal and pay us to post it.

I think that PG Economics could add value.

We could do something but I would caution that we may call more attention to the document than it would otherwise get. This thing can't be targeted for a serious mainstream audience but rather to reaffirm the choir's faith.

Regards

Bruce

On Nov 23, 2010, at 6:26 AM, Val Giddings wrote:

Bruce -- Do you think you and David might be interested in crafting a rebuttal to the attached for AcaRev? I bet we could generate some respectable support for it... alternatively we might solicit PGE to do a distillation of their work that we could post... whaddyathink?

<GMsoy_Sust_Respons_FULL_ENG_v9.pdf>