Do you know why people prefer the textures they do?

Watch our video

Some people want crunchy potato chips. Others reach for smooth, creamy yogurt. Now we have a better idea why. Research shows that individuals have innate ways of manipulating food in their mouths, which determine the textures they prefer. Watch our video to hear consumers talk about what they like and why—and learn how to make products that match those preferences.

Consumers have an ally in managing blood sugar

A long-awaited new label statement on type 2 diabetes risk is entering the marketplace. Learn more at our 30 minute FNCE® Expo Briefing on October 23 at 11:00 a.m., in the Expo Hall Learning Center. We will cover:

- The growing consumer need for foods that help reduce the risk of type 2 diabetes, based on the latest CDC findings
- The FDA-authorized qualified health claim for high-amylose maize resistant starch and a reduced risk of type 2 diabetes, citing limited scientific evidence
- How HI-MAIZE® resistant starch from Ingredion can improve insulin sensitivity, a risk factor for type 2 diabetes

We hope to see you there and in the FNCE® Expo Hall at Ingredion booth #332.

Expo Briefing Presenter: Lois Moss-Barnwell, MS, RD, LDN, CDE. Diet Rx, Ltd.
